After many months of study, the organization and mission for the National Science and Technology Center was recently approved. The time during the studies was no doubt a distraction at best to all of us. I want to take the opportunity to congratulate all of you for continuing to focus on our mission by providing quality work for our many customers as we determined our future.

The National Science and Technology Center has an exciting mission that will prove to be of great value to the Bureau of Land Management. Some of what we will be doing is new, while other work will continue in the fine tradition that we have established as NARSC. Together, we will make a difference for the American public.

I am awarding each of you a non-monetary award in recognition of your dedication during this unsettled period. I invite each of you to stop by the Foothills Conference area tomorrow between 9 and 10 a.m. so I can present the award to you personally. If you are away from the office or cannot attend for some other reason, I will give you the award through your supervisor.

Again, I want to thank all of you for a great job.
